THE MAN.

General Weaver neither uses tobacco nor intoxicating liquors, nor does he swear, and never did. But few men served during the war without contracting one or both of these vile habits in some degree. His exemplary habits are more remarkable from the fact that he was raised a Democrat and was for several years a Republican. For the last 27 years he has devoted his energies to the service of the people and in defending them against the encroachments of the money powers. Whether on the tented field, in legislative halls or in private life his record is clean-cut and most brilliant. From the time he arrived to manhood he has been a most industrious student of the science of government, of the history of political parties, of public men and measures. The financial questions have received his most earnest attention. Upon all these subjects he is the best posted man in America. He is possessed of the greatest energy and industry. He labors from twelve to sixteen hours of the twenty-four from day to day and from year to year, and was never known to be tired. His physical constitution is only equalled in strength by the vigor and power of his intellect. He is a plebeian by birth. His veins are not tainted with royal blood, codfish aristocracy or American kangaroo snobbery or English-aping monkeyism. He was born and raised on a farm. He is one of the toiling millions. For twenty years incessant manual toil was his lot, and all his life he has been a laborer, in fields of productive industry. He is the friend of the people, and the champion of the rights of the man who earns his living by the sweat of his face. In the present culminating contest between the people and plutocracy, between the oppressed industrial masses and the favored, pampered and fostered classes, every impulse of his heart, every fiber of his generous nature and the warp and woof of his whole being are for the people and country. In 1877 he revolted against the financial policy and boodles of the Republican party. This brought on an irrepressible conflict with the G. O. P.

As a debator on the stump he has no competitor. In his canvass for Congress the Republicans pitted General M. E. Cutts, their greatest orator in Iowa, against him on the stump. They canvassed the district in joint discussion. The result was Weaver's election by 2,000 majority in a Republican district of a usual majority of 4,000. Subsequently he canvassed Texas in the interest of Wash Jones for governor and against the Democratic party. He was billed to make fifteen speeches. The Democratic State central committee selected three of their greatest and most powerful stumpers to meet him by turns in public discussion.—Hubbard, Giddings and Throckmorton. Each of these gentlemen took a tilt at him; but one tilt satisfied them. They abandoned the joint debate, and he filled the balance of the appointments—twelve, unmolested by any Democratic champion. He has met the party lions in their dens throughout the country. Fanueil Hall and Cooper Union have been made vocal with the music of his eloquence. No man in America is so feared and hated by the gold-bugs, gold trusts, gold commune, Wall street and the plutocracy as the two continents as General Weaver. And no man is so admired and beloved by the great mass of the people of the South, the Mississippi valley and the middle Western States. He has made more speeches for the free coinage of silver than any other man. He has carried the free coinage banner into nearly every State and is now carrying it to the front on every stump. To mention the names of the two gold-bugs, Harrison and Cleveland, with his on the same day is nauseating to every true silver man.
